The housing index rose some 0.8%, with homes for sale increasing in price by 0.5% and rented property up 2.6%. This was mainly due to the dollar-shekel exchange rate, with the dollar increasing in value by more than 1%, according to the CBS.

The largest rises were in the cost of clothing and footwear, an increase of 7.7%, largely due to the new winter fashions arriving in the shops, according to government statisticians. Clothing prices went up 9.1%, and shoes by 2.6%.

The food index increased 0.9%. including fish (2%), milk and dairy produce (2.3%), preserves (3%), and confectioneries (2%). These were offset to some extent by reductions in flour (1.6%) and sugar and sugar substitute (2%) prices. Elsewhere, there were also rises in the cost of household supplies (0.4%), health care (0.9%), and education (0.1%).

Transport and communications rices remained largely unchanged in October.

The cost of fruits and vegetables went down some 1.9%, major contributors being avocado (38.9%) and oranges (27.3%).

The price of household furnishing and equipment dropped by 0.1%, with washing machines costing 1.2% less and flowers and plants 6.6% cheaper than in September. Manufacturers Association economists say inflation for 1996 will reach 10.5%, which is far too high. The continuing policy of the govemment and Bank of Israel to sit and do nothing is leading to the ongoing slowdown," said association director-general Yoram Belizovsky, in calling for an immediate 2% cut in interest rates. This trend is "dangerous, and could lead to recession and unemployment." Reacting to the CPI increase, Histadrut Chairman MK Amir Peretz called on Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel to significantly reduce interest rates, particularly to help out salaried employees. Peretz said that while he was pleased with the relatively low CPI figures in recent months, the Histadrut is more concerned about the slowdown of the economy. While refusing to predict the CPI for November, CBS economists said it is clear there will be a further increase in clothing and footwear

Scitex loses $151m. in third quarter

SCITEX Corp. Ltd. had a net loss of $151 million for the third quarter of 1996, the company announced at the end of the week. Scitex said it plans to significantly reduce costs in the company's Graphic Arts Group, including a 17 percent reduction in staff, as part of a restructuring plan to improve performance. It also plans to close major facilities in the US and Europe. Its third-quarter results included a $56m. restructuring charge. Scitex had a $3.53 net loss per share on revenues of $142m., compared to a net loss of S30m, or S0.85 per share on revenues of

ISRAELI and Palestinian negotiators on Friday ended the sixth week of talks on Hebron redeployment yard of his bome in Kabatiya. The explosion attracted people from around the village to the site, where his body was found blown to pieces.

Palestinian sources said he was released from an Israeli prison two months ago, and was known to the IDF. Villagers said Asaf had served numerous jail sentences for Hamas activism.

Two suicide bombings, in Afula and Hadera in 1994, were planned from Kabatiya, where a-militant Hamas cell is known to be working. Kabatiya is in Area B. which is under Israeli security control.

Asaf's body was brought to a Jenin hospital at about noon by family members, who said he was killed in a bomb blast. Palestinian Police arrived at the hospital just as the body was brought in, and also went to Asaf's home.

"At about 11 a.m. this morning, a huge explosion was heard in town, a Kabatiya resident said. "People from all over came to the site of the explosion in Asaf's yard on the outskirts of town, where his family found his body completely charred and blown to bits. Starting at 4:00 a.m., 8,000 more workers from the West Bank and 7,000 from the Gaza Strip were to join the 35,000 allowed in last week, the army said. In addition, the army will allow another 500 merchants into the country from the territories, half from the Gaza Strip and half from the West Bank. All told, the IDF is allowing 2,520 merchants into Israel for business purposes. Over the weekend, a 10-yearold Israeli boy suffered a fractured skull when the car in which he was riding was hit by a stone near the village of Otzarin in Samaria, the IDF said. Army doctors treated the boy at the site and he was rushed to Beilinson Hospital with moder-

Telephone hot line for 'closet Jews' set up in Poland

A KIND of "Jews Anonymous." for people who think they are of Jewish origin and feel the need to talk about it, has been set up in

The Jewish Forum Foundation in Warsaw has set up a telephone hot line to take calls from people who wish to make discreet inquiries about their background over the phone.

"There are many thousands of beople of Jewish ancestry who come from assimilated families. They know practically nothing about their heritage and feel a need to find out more," says Warsaw mathematician and Jewish activist, Stanislaw Krajewski, 47, who heads the pro-

Officially, there are now about 8.000 Jews living in Poland, compared to a prewar community of 3.3 million, but it is thought there are many thousands of people of Jewish or part-Jewish descent who felt it necessary to hide their origins during the Communist era or who had not been told until recently by their relatives that they were Jewish. This is no joke. In a sense it's funny, but it's also deadly serious," one of the hot line's volun-

There are now many people in their 50s who were placed at birth or as very young children with Polish families and never saw their parents again. It's very hard for them. They have grown up in traditional Polish families, usually Before the new hot line was started, volunteers recount tales of middle-aged people, many in tears, turning up at the Jewish Historical Institute in Warsaw and other places.

"We are not just talking about one or two people but dozens," said Aleksium.

"Some have just a name of their birth parents to go on nothing more. A few have been able to find relatives in Israel or the US. But most have not. In many cases. of course, none of their immediate family survived the war." ...

Likud, Labor claim no unity gov't in works

SOURCES close to the prime minister rejected out of hand a claim that he is moving toward establishing a national unity government. The speculation about the likelihood of a renewed attempt to form a national unity coalition gathered momentum over the weekend from two sources.

The first was Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's address to the American Jewish leadership in Seattle, Washington. The second was journalist Amnon Abramowitz. who claimed on Channel 1 on Friday night that Netanyahu had stated in a private conversation his intent to pursue the idea of a national unity coalition after the Hebron redeployment.

However, according to the sources close to the prime minister, the most basic prerequisite for a national unity coalition - com-mon ground for action - is missing. As things stand now there are no common denominators for policy formulation and implementation, the sources stressed, adding that past experience does not lend the impression that there can be genuine cooperation.

Meanwhile, Finance Minister Dan Meridor called for the formation of a national unity govern-ment in an appearance on Channel l's "Mishak Hashabbat" program this weekend, saying a Labor-Likud coalition would be much better equipped to solve the nation's problems.

"If you want to manage these negotiations and arrive at positive results, the best way is with a national unity government," he said. "In my opinion, the interest which must win out is the general Israeli interest and a national unity government, with all of its faults.

and SARAH HONIG

is a goal we must reach to do this." Labor MKs again rejected this

In a speech broadcast via satellite to the General Assembly of the Council of Jewish Federations in Scattle, Netanyahu expressed his wish to establish a broad national consensus after the Hebron rede-

"I don't think that with something as sensitive as this we should negotiate in a very narrow spectrum," Netanyahu said. "I think here we have to offer the broadest possible consensus in the Israeli public for the achievement of an agreement that would be more stable, more durable, I think ultimately of greater value, if it enjoys the broadest backing of the Israeli people."

Netanyahu said he was convinced that Israel could can offer a "vision" of a final settlement that would give the Palestinians the freedom "to conduct their lives" and that also would provide Israel with security.

This balance can be achieved by appealing to the ... widest consensus among the people of Israel." he said.

What we need to do is to seek consciously to reach out to one another and to seek a dialogue that we are engaged in right now between all parts of the Israeli political sphere in order to come to these pivotal negotiations from a united point of view," he told the annual assembly of the Council of Jewish Federations, the umbrella organization of 189 autonomous fund-raising agencies in North America.

and Arab intransigence has been encouraged by "the idea that we can be disunited," he said. The Arab world believes "we are split and divided and cannot make up our minds on a proposal for peace."

According to Abramowitz, Netanyahu stated that he plans to pursue a national unity coalition after the Hebron redeployment, but without Labor party leader Shimon Peres, because of Peres's reputation for undermining prime ministers under whom he served, including Yitzhak Rabin and Yitzhak Shamir. Abramowitz claimed Netanyahu said that, if given half a chance, Peres would run to the Palestinians and make deals behind the prime minister's back.

Likud sources derided the Abramowitz scenario. They noted that if anyone in Labor is keenly motivated to join a coalition under Netanyahu, it would be no one else but Peres, who would thus get his last chance to hold high executive office as Labor's number one and thereby continue his hold on the party and thwart the ambitions of his would-be successors, most specifically Ehud Barak. sources ridiculed Abramowitz's assertion that Netanyahu is exhorting Labor to kick out Peres and hurry and choose someone else.

As to Netanyahu's own remarks the sources noted that they hardly included anything new and that he had said similar things previously. Netanyahu, according to these sources, earnestly desires, a national consensus on what is yet to come regarding the Oslo Accords, but that need not come in the form of a national unity gov-

LEADERS of the Council of Jewish Communities in Judea, Samaria and Gaza held. a protest outside the Prime Minister's Office Friday against the Hebron agreement being finalized with the Palestinians, saying its terms are worse than those in the Oslo 2 accord.

The council's anti-government demonstration was its first since the establishment of the Netanyahu government.

The leaders, including council head Pinhas Wallerstein, spokesman Aharon Domb, and former MK Elyakim Ha'etzni, held the protest after the council decided in an emerency meeting to take action against Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's intention to implement a similar Hebron redeployment plan to the one envisaged by the previous prevent the implementation of the agreement as it has been presented to us."

Meanwhile, Habad announced plans to hold its national convention at the Avraham Avinu synagogue complex in Hebron on Tuesday to identify with the plight of the Jewish community there, in advance of IDF redeployment in the city.

The gathering will focus largely on the issue of the wholeness and security of the Land of Israel in general and Hebron in particular, according to the organizers. Habad leaders have come out openly against the redeployment and against Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, saying they is only following in the footsteps of the previ-

Habad officials said they feared radicals in the group might try to break up the gathering by causing provocations in the city, but a Habad spokesman rejected this, saying Habad members were disciplined and responsible. However, he said he hoped other groups would not try to use the gathering as an excuse for incitement in Hebron.

Habad rabbis met Thursday night with former chief rabbi Avraham Shapira about the possibility of a mass prayer session to "save the situation." They also met with leaders of the Council of Jewish Communities in Judea, Samaria and Gaza and with NRP Knesset faction leader MK Hanan Porat.

Meanwhile, Habad activists in Kiryat Malachi have asked Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai for permission to enter IDF bases in the South to "spread Torah," as they had until a few months ago when they were refused entry after complaints that some of them were involved in political activity on behalf, of Netanyahu during the election campaign.

Kiryat Malachi local council chairman Moshe Shimon added his name to the Habad activists' request, stressing the positive things they did when visiting the bases and asking

IDF: Delivery of Russian-built sub to Iranians raises concern ARIEH O'SULLIVAN

THE expected delivery next week of the third Russian-built Kiloclass submarine to the Iranian navy has raised concern among naval commanders and intelligence officers, who fear the deadly vessels could easily and quickly find their way into the Mediterranean to aid Israel's enemies.

Iran is expected to receive the submarine on November 25, its navy chief Rear Adm. Ali Shamkhani told reporters yesterday. The arrival of the sub coincides with a week-long major military maneuver involving over 10,000 servicemen. Over 100 vessels are expected to participate, including the two Kilo-class submarines already in Iran's possession. The diesel-electric submarines were delivered in 1992 and 1993.

"You don't build a submarine fleet for defense," one senior intelligence officer said. "Submarines are used for disrupting sea routes and attacking ships. The are a strategic threat to us because 97 percent of our military supplies

MAJ.-GEN. Oren Shahor, who met with President Ezer Weizman on Friday, is expected to meet with Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai

this week to discuss his dismissal from the peace negotiations.

Weizman is reportedly coming to Shahor's defense and will seek to have the general reinstated to his job as top negotiator for civilian affairs with the Palestinians. Shahor was suspended earlier this month when it was reported he had been holding periodic meetings with opposition leaders Shimon Peres and Yossi Beilin. Sources close to Shahor said the meeting with Weizman was at the president's request and that Shahor received all the necessary authoriza-

When Mordechai suspended Shahor he said it would be only until an inquiry into the meetings was completed. But the sources said that so far, besides a letter Shahor wrote outlining his meetings with the Labor politicians, no inquiry has begun.

Shahor has remained in his role as government coordinator of activi-ties in the territories and has held several meetings with Mordechai since the affair surfaced on October 31. But none of the meetings dealt with Shahor's suspension, the sources said. Shahor has maintained that his seven meetings with Peres were on a friendly basis and denied he passed on secret information. Shahor's committee had already reached agreement on civilian issues when he was suspended.

3 Arabs reportedly slice off man's arm with sword

Suknick said one of the Arab men he argued with grabbed the sword from him, slashed him several times, and fled with the others, taking the sword with them.

The friend, here on a tourist visa for four months, brought Suknick. to the Magen David Adom station in Romema. He then went to the hotel where they had been staying since Thursday, apparently to clean up, and was detained by police when he returned to the station.

Russia agrees on draft treaty with rebel Chechens

MOSCOW (Reuter) - Russian and Chechen representatives said on Saturday they had drawn up a temporary agreement to clarify relations between Moscow and the war-torn separatist region.

The document, designed to cover the period up to January 27, when elections are due to be held in Chechnya, was expected to be signed soon by rebel leader Zelimkhan Yandarbiyev and Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chemomyrdin.

It was hammered out in talks in Moscow between the secretary of Russia's Security Council, Ivan Rybkin, and Akhmed Zakayev, an aide to the separatist Chechen leadership.

"We have worked out the text of the treaty which can be signed by the chairmen of both governments," Rybkin told Russian whether Zavgayev himself Television after meeting planned to step down but the move Yandarbiyev's security adviser.

The agreement is designed to build on a peace deal reached in August after 21 months of fighting between the rebels and Russian troops which killed tens of thousands of people in the North Caucasus region.

"We've prepared a very solid, good document, which will bear fruit in the near future," Zakayev was quoted as saying by the RIA news agency.

In a further boost for the peace process, Chechnya's pro-Moscow leader Doku Zavgayev announced that his government - already sidelined by the August deal and apparently abandoned by Russia - planned to step down but the move was expected to clarify the question of political responsibility in the breakaway region.

Ekho Moskvy radio quoted Rybkin as saying Zavgayev's decision was "an act of good will made in the name of a swift regulation of the military conflict and of achieving national reconciliation."

Zakayev said yesterday's accord mainly, concerned the economic aspects of the future of the oil-rich region, including reconstruction and restoration of transportation

Rwandan Hutu refugees flood back from Zaire

A SEA of Rwandan Hutu refugees poured out of Zaire yesterday, overwhelming aid workers on the border as they returned to the country they fled over two years ago.

The steady flow swamped the Goma-Gisenyi border post. Aid officials gave up trying to register them, but the border remained open.

Joseph Bideri, Rwanda's presidential spokesman, denied a report from the UN refugee agency (UNHCR) that the border was being closed to "control the influx."

Reuters journalists at the main crossing quoted Rwandan officers at the border as saying they had orders to close it at 7 p.m. but the barriers did not come down.

The UNHCR said an estimated 200,000 people had flooded through the post since Friday when their exodus from Zaire began after extremist Hutu militia who had controlled the camps fled under attack by Zairean rebels.

"It's pointless trying to count them. It's endless and we are running out of space every sec-ond," said a delegate of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). As night fell across central Africa, hundreds of thousands of refugees prepared for another night in the open.

On the Zairean side of the border, Goma filled with the smoke of cooking fires as thousands of families prepared food and shelters of green plastic sheets.

It was not immediately clear Rescue workers dig for survivors in Russian blast

MOSCOW (Reuter) - Rescue workers dug through the night in search of survivors from a blast, possibly caused by a bomb, that killed up to 32 yesterday in Russia's southern republic of Dagestan, news agencies said.

The government pledged a swift investigation into the explosion, which destroyed a concrete-panel building housing mostly military personnel and their families.

Russian news agencies put the death toll at between 13 and 32 but the ministry for emergency situations gave a lower figure. "So far we can confirm seven dead, including three children, six uninjured and seven sent to hospital," a ministry spokeswoman told Reuters. About 58 people were in the eight-story block when the explosion took place at 2:20 a.m., she

More than 130 people, mostly families of border guards and air force officers, lived in the building in the town of Kaspiysk, a port on the Caspian Sea. President Boris Yeltsin, recovering from heart surgery, sent his con-dolences to relatives of the dead and the government said it would set up a commission under a deputy prime minister, Oleg Lobov, to investigate the causes of the blast.

"I vouch that all necessary measures will be taken to uncover the reasons," Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin said in a statement carried by Itar-Tass news agency.

Regional authorities declared today and tomorrow official days of mourning in Dagestan, which borders the Caspian Sea and the breakaway Russian republic of Chechnya.

Some officials said there might be a link between the explosion and Chechnya, where an uneasy peace is holding after a 21-month bloody conflict between Russian forces and separatists.

Leonid Mayorov, deputy secretary of Russia's powerful Security Council, called the explosion an attempt to derail delicate peace talks, RIA said.

Pope and Castro to hold historic meeting Tuesday

THE Vatican said yesterday that Pope John Paul and Cuban President Fidel Castro will meet Tuesday, ending suspense about whether two of the towering figures of the 20th century would ever come face to face.

The meeting at the Vatican will be the first encounter between the veteran communist revolutionary and the anti-communist Polish pontiff and could pave the way for the pope's first visit to the Caribbean island.

Cuba, where Church-state relations have been at times frosty, is the only Spanish-speaking country in Latin America the 76-year-old pontiff has not visited.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Vails said in a brief annoucement that the pope would receive 70-year-old Castro, who is in Rome for the UN-sponsored World Food Summit, at a private audience at 11 a.m. on Tuesday.

The groundwork for Tuesday's meeting was

PHILIP PULLELLA VATICAN CITY

Archbishop Jean-Louis Tauran, who visited Cuba last month and met Castro.

Tauran said before leaving the island that an eventual trip by the Pope to Cuba would be a new departure point on the road towards normalised relations between the Roman Catholic Church and the communist state.

Cuban authorities told Tauran during his visit that a invitation from the government in 1989 was still valid "and one could soon think of [making] the necessary preparations."

Vatican sources have said a trip could take place as early as next year. It might be part of a trip to Brazil already planned for October.

Despite recent improvements, relations between the Cuban Catholic Church and the done by the Vatican's foreign minister, communist government are still strained over isses of education, full religious freedom, and the Church's use of the mass media.

"All these are problems to resolve but dialogue exists, it must continue, and I hope the climate of cordiality, I would say, of comprehension, which marked my visit, will encourage a positive development for the solution of problems which are still outstanding." Tauran told Vatican radio last month.

A group of Cuban exiles arrived in Rome last week and denounced alleged human rights abuses in Cuba when they attended a papal general audience.

The group, which included former political prisoners, are expected to be out in force for Tuesday's meeting.

Varican sources said that at next week's audience, the pope is expected to push for democratic reforms in Cuba and Castro would most likely repeat his condemnation of the 34-yearold US embargo against the island. (Reuter)

Alger Hiss dies in New York City at age 92

NEW YORK (Reuter) - Alger Hiss. one of the most famous targets of the anti-Communist witch-hunt that swept the United States in the early stages of the Cold War, died on Friday at age 92.

Hiss died at Lenox Hill Hospital after a long illness, a hospital spokeswoman said. She had no other details.

Hiss was thrust to the center of a sensational espionage case in the late 1940s, when relations between the United States and the Soviet Union had deteriorated badly and fears swept the United States that Communists had infiltrated the highest levels of government.

Hiss was accused in 1948 by journalist Whittaker Chambers of providing him with US government secrets to pass to the Soviets. Congressman Richard Nixon.

who later would become US president, took on the Hiss case as a personal mission. "If the American people knew the real nature of Alger Hiss, they would boil him in oil," he said.

Hiss was president of the Carnegie Endowment for Carnegie International Peace at the time of the allegations, had worked as foreign policy coordinator at the State Department during the administration of President Franklin Roosevelt and had helped set up the United Nations.

Chambers, an editor at Time magazine and former Communist, told the House Un-American Activities Committee that Hiss had been a party member and said Hiss supplied him with classified informa-

Following Nixon's fall because of the Watergate scandal, Hiss asked the courts to overturn his conviction. But in 1983 the US Supreme Court rejected without comment his appeal for a review. The case would continue to stir strong emotions.

In 1984, a book called Perjury by historian Allen Weinstein claimed Hiss had perjured himself when describing his dealings with Chambers. The author said he had started out believing Hiss was innocent but found the evidence supported the charges.

In 1992, columnist James Kilpatrick wrote that "Hiss lives on, a pitiful relic of the age of the Cold War, still denying his insignificant treason to an audience that ceased to care a long time ago."

While the question of Hiss's guilt or innocence was never fully resolved, a senior adviser to Russian President Boris Yeltsin said in 1992 that newly opened : files showed no evidence that Hiss had spied for Moscow.

O.J. Simpson ordered to testify on Friday

SANTA MONICA, California (Reuter) - The judge in the O.J. Simpson civil case Friday ordered the former football star, who never testified at his murder trial, to take the witness stand at the end of this week, a source involved in the case said. The ruling by Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki came on the same day he dismissed a woman alternate juror for occasionally dozing off during court sessions. But jurors will likely have no trouble staying awake next Friday when Simpson begins telling his side of the story for the first time in a court of law.

Legal analysts say Simpson's testimony could be the most crucial chapter of the trial. He is expected to be grilled for several days by the plaintiffs' attorneys, and his performance is all but certain to be a major factor in determining whether he wins or loses the Simpson was acquitted in October of last year of murdering his ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her friend, Ronald Goldman. He is now on trial in civil court facing a wrongful-death lawsuit brought by the victims' families.

Simpson's attorneys had tried to persuade Fujisaki to delay his testimony in Santa Monica because he wanted to be present in a courtroom in nearby Orange County where he is fighting the parents of his slain ex-wife for full custody of his two young children. But Fujisaki spoke to the judge in the child-custody Simpson missing a few days of the Orange County proceedings, which got under way earlier this week. the source said.

Fujisaki then sided with the families' attorneys, ordering Simpson to begin testifying next Friday, the source said. Simpson had the right to refuse to testify during his criminal trial, but under the rules of civil procedure he can be forced to take the stand or forfeit his case, which could cost him millions of dollars in

The plaintiffs' attorneys earlier Friday released a list showing they had fewer than 10 more witnesses to call before getting to Simpson. They estimated the others, including limousine driver Allan Park and former Simpson houseguest Kato Kaelin, would be through testifying by next Thursday. Simpson's can be called again during the defense portion of the case if his attorneys choose to do so. Earlier Friday, Fujisaki announced the removal of an 18-year-old juror, who is white, to the remaining panelists, telling them, "Do not speculate as to the reason why.'

According to transcripts from a discussion outside the jury's hearing, Simpson lead attorney Robert Baker asked that the woman be removed, saying "I think she has been asleep throughout a large portion

Finger leads police to carjack suspect CHULA VISTA, California

(Reuter) - Police often use fingerprints to nab criminals; this time they had the whole finger to lead them to a suspected carjacker.

Police say the suspect, Victor Arreola, allegedly stopped a van in National City, north of San Diego, and ordered out the driver, Emmanuel Balbuena, his wife and three children.

But when Arreola tried to get into the van on the driver's side. Balbuena, still in his seat, slammed the door, severing the middle finger on the suspect's right hand.

After contacting several hospital emergency rooms, police were told a patient had checked into Scripps Hospital in Chula Vista claiming he lost a finger in a motorcycle accident. Prosecutor Patrick Espinoza on Friday picked up the story. They had a conversation with Mr. Arreola and brought the finger with them. One of the officers said, 'I think I have something for you.'

"Yeah, that's my finger,' he [Arreola] said. The doctors were ready to reattach it, then the officers said. 'You're under arrest for carjacking.' That's when he changed his mind and said, 'That's not my finger.' "

It didn't matter. According to Espinoza, Balbuena showed up later and "fingered him there at the hospital" following the incident last month.

According to Friday's San Diego Union-Tribune, too much time had passed for the finger to be reattached.

Arreola is in jail awaiting a January 9 trial on five counts of attempted carjacking and five counts of attempted robbery.... And the finger is in a refrigera-tor at National City police head-

Ha'olam Hamufla Behatzer Ha'ahori, a Hebrew-language CD-ROM by Hed Arizi Multimedia, translated from One Small Square: Backyard, by Virgin Sound and Vision and Scientific American, for ages eight and up,

Rating: four-and-a-half stars out of five

7ITH this computer program, you can learn about the great outdoors, the flora, fauna and the ecology, without getting your feet wet or your hands dirty. Scientific American, a monthly journal read and understood by science aficionados alone, has outdone itself in making nature understandable and exciting to even very young

The nature disk will attract kids much younger than the eight-yearold minimum marked on the package, thanks to the excellent graphics and films, and the extensive, pleasant narration by Danny Sirkin (an adult) and Lisa Milstein (a child). Older children will enjoy these, as well as a large database on species, the detailed suggestions of scientific experiments to perform outdoors, and the built-in diary for storing the data they have learned.

One section of the program presents a square of earth, at ground level, skywards and below the ground, as it metamorphoses through the four seasons. Just a click of the mouse changes the trees' and bushes' snow-covered tresses to budding branches and then to boughs of leaves that, in autumn, ripen to yellow and orange hues and fall to the ground. Users can easily twirl the square of earth in any of four directions to get a better angle, and then click a "magnifying glass" to get a close-up.

In the nature-studies section, one can click on any of 12 subjects, from the food chain, food subjects are meant for the latter. This disk is suited to Americans or Israelis, fluent in English, who know about world records, American pop culture, sports, inventions, horror, mythology and a potpourri of other subjects. There are also brain teasers and an interesting category presenting a film or slide for a few seconds and asking you to recall a detail from your observation of it.

The host of the journey is a rather snide character who is a spitting image of the Israeli conductor Gary Bertini. The life-like, balding figure with a mouthful of white teeth intrudes on your game and mocks your ignorance when you miss a few correct answers, but offers polite praise if you do well. His words are a bit out of synch with his lips.

There are five stages players must go through: The aim of the game is to prove you are so knowledgeable in 10 core subjects that you are suited for conquering the "Planet Dirt" and outwitting Earthlings. In each stage, a question is shot at you, and within a few seconds you must click on the correct answer out of five; the stages differ according to the way one chooses the subject and the consequences of failure. If your choice is incorrect, the right answer is never given (this is annoying, but it prevents memorizing right responses and running out of the hundreds of questions). Each question is assigned a certain number of points according to difficulty. You can play alone or against another player. The trivia material is not on the sophisticated level of, say, the Hitamlut Boker questions given in Ha'aretz every morning, but the graphics are excellent. The high price is not justified, as the product has just been imported but not translated into Hebrew. Jewish knowledge at your fingertips

THE Encyclopedia Judaica Junior, born nearly a quarter of a century ago in Jerusalem, has grown up and matured into a product suited for the 21st century. The first multi-media Jewish encyclopedia in the world, now aimed at the whole family rather than just at children and teenagers, this new CD-ROM will be a boon to English-speakers who want to learn about Jewish subjects. It is an encyclopedia that speaks - and sings - to you. It brings you, for example, the sound of Yemenite Jewish children learning the alef-bet in unison, a Yom Kippur prayer chanted by an Ashkenazi cantor, and a woman singing a Ladino ballad to Jerusalem. But it's much more than that. It's a compendium of 1,500 subjects related to the Jewish People, their Bible, literature, history, religion, customs, historical figures and contemporary personalities - in Israel and in the Diaspora

Originally edited by Raphael Posner and printed in six volumes by the Keter Publishing Company, the Judaica Junior was based on famed, 16-volume Encyclopedia Judaica, with its authoritative 25,000 entries written by 2,200 contributors, 12 miland 9,000 illust Although it has been updated since the early '70s with only annual and decennial yearbooks rather than

tion, it remains an incomparable source for information. With its heavy emphasis on facts, the Encyclopedia Judaica cannot be pleasurably imbibed like a non-fiction book, and it is difficult reading for youths or even uninitiated adults. Thus the Judaica Junior met the needs of a different audience, who wanted crisp, bright explanations and

Some 23 years ago, as a fledgling writer trying out at The Jerusalem Post, I wrote a number of articles for the Judaica Junior. topics I wrote, but I do recall the hard work of translating the heavy, difficult texts from the regular encyclopedia into material that would interest a younger, less-informed audience. Now, the new CD-ROM, which sells abroad for $139 and the shekel equivalent here, has my name in the list of about 20 contributors to the Judaica Junior. The writers have no financial benefit from the high-tech version, but they would derive much enjoyment to see how the disk makes their words come to life.

C.D.I. Systems, a software house and electronic publisher in Jerusalem's Har Hotzvim industrial park, purchased the rights to Keter's junior encyclopedia and decided to turn it into a CD-ROM, using the company's full-text retrieval system. This companydeveloped technique takes printed text and turns it into digital data, not only storing it on disk but allowing users to search for every mention of every word in the text.

C.D.L. Systems' technology has previously been used to digitize the compendium of Israeli laws, Bezeq telephone books, The Jerusalem Post's back editions material, says Hillel Ashkenazy, a lawyer and businessman who is chairman of C.D.L Systems.

The company's staff is comprised largely of top-level computer programmers born in Russia, North America and Israel. The CD-ROM editor was Dafna Adoram and the coordinator Esther Amit. They invested two years in the Judaica Junior project, updating and expanding the topics, searching for appropriate photos and other graphic material, and collecting recordings from the National Sound Archives, the Renanot Institute for Jewish Music and other sources. Ashkenazy, a Tadiran director and former board member of Koor and director-gen-

The Jerusalem-based Torah Educational Software (TES) company, which has already done work with ArtScroll publishing, Bar-Ilan University's Responsa Project and other prestigious organizations, was selected to market and distribute the CD-ROM abroad. TES owner Emanuel Fishman says the disk will be an ideal bar- or batmitzva present, in demand in Jewish schools, libraries, community centers as well as homes.

The disk opens with an A-to-Z list. Click on a letter to see all subjects starting with that letter, or else type in a specific word to locate it in a split second. You can also search a topic by categories or article titles; a useful vocabulary listing lets you enter any word and find every time it is mentioned in the entire text of the encyclopedia. Once you find an article, certain words and names that appear in blue can be clicked to find cross-references.

There is a sound collection with dozens of minute-long recordings. clicking "Music" or hit a quarternote at the top of the article's text. There is also a graphics collection comprised of all the photos and drawings in the disk; each of these can be magnified to fill the entire screen. Click the Quiz button and you are presented with 10 questions at a time; identify the correct name or object of a photo and the disk will crown you a "genius."

The CD-ROM is perfect for preparing school reports on sub-

Making sense of medical abbreviations

POST HEALTH REPORTER

E'LL start with a med-ical quiz: What do the abbreviations HIT, PTA, IMF and SLPI stand for? The answers are, respectively, hemagglutination-inhibition test, plasma thromboplastic antecedent OR percutaneous transluminal angioplasty, idiopathic mediastinal fibrosis and secretory leukoprotease inhibitor. It you got all the answers right, you won't need the new book Abbreviations in Medicine: English and Hebrew, by Dr. Dan Gaton and Prof. Edith Gaton. He is an ophthalmologist at the Rabin Medical Center - Beilinson Campus, and she is a pathologist and pediatrician who spent years teaching at Tel Aviv University's Sackler Medical School.

The NIS 67 volume, containing the English and Hebrew terms for over 1,500 medical abbreviations. can finally help patients understand a bit about medical reports sent to them after examinations

The 248-page book, published by Gomeh Scientific Publications and Tcherikover Publishers Ltd. in Tel Aviv, will also be useful, of course, to doctors who have forgotten some of what they had to memorize in medical school. The abbreviations appear according to alphabetical order in English, and the terms appear according to the order of the alef-bet. It is on sale at commercial and university bookstores and directly from the pub-

MDA TO BE COMPENSATED Magen David Adom's costs of treating road-accident victims will be covered by the Avner insurance company and the National Insurance Institute. The government decided this recently, on the grounds that road accidents could be considered work accidents. At present, on the basis of analysis of the specific circumstances of each case, about a fifth of road accidents are recognized by the NII as work accidents.

MDA charges patients it treats at home or other private places, but it cannot ask for payment from the injured its ambulance staffers pick up on the road. Every year, it treats and evacuates to hospital 40,000 road-accident victims; the cost of their care has contributed to the voluntary organization's NIS 40 million deficit.

The government recently asked the ministers of health and finance to prepare legislation that would require Avner (a consortium of insurance companies that jointly cover the costs of physical injury to victims) and the NII to pay MDA for its services. A set proportion of compulsory auto insurance collected by Avner will be allocated for this purpose, as will be an annual fee transferred by NIL By December 1, the two ministers will decide on the amount of money to be transferred to MDA.

selling battery rechargers that use regular batteries. JUDY SIEGEL-ITZKOVICH But electronics shops also sell rechargers that use special, and very expensive, rechargeable bat-teries. Is it possible to recharge ordinary batteries? Yair, Tel Aviv.

Prof. Shmuel Ben-Yaakov of the electrical engineering department at Ben-Gurion University and head of its power-electronics lab replies: Nickel-cadmium batteries are the specially sealed and expensive recharged as many as 200 times each. Ordinary, cheap alkaline batteries cannot be recharged in the same way or to the same effect. Inserting them into rechargers meant for alkaline batteries will allow you to re-use them five or 10 times, but this will only "refresh" them on a limited basis, producing about 20% or 30% of their regular power. The ads for these devices do not tell you this. It's hard to say whether using rechargeable nickel-cadmium batteries is better for the environment or not: Their manufacture is somewhat harmful to the environment, as they contain cadmium. In addition, recharging them with electricity uses current as well. But garbage dumps can also harm the madeiground water supply.

I strongly urge those who buy alkaline batteries not to use recharging devices meant for nickel-cadmium batteries, or viceversa, as this would cause an explosion or cause the device to break down. Also, alkaline batteries are not sealed tightly, and recharging which can harm the electrical device in which you put them.

There are numerous rechargeable devices, such as portable phones, electric toothbrushes, drills and shavers, which have a special "smart" system inside. These control recharging so current is stored in the amount and at the pace that is required. These can be recharged almost an endless number of times.

technique to whiten wood pulp, using enzymes and much less chlorine than in conventional bleaching, has been developed and refined by Haifa Technion researchers, who believe it will reduce pollution of the environment. The patented method is not more expensive than the use of large amounts of chlorine, and has been successfully tested in a large-scale paper-mill

The quality of paper is measured by its degree of whiteness and brightness, and the fact that it doesn't yellow with time. Paper is made by leveling wood pulp and drying it into long sheets. High-quality paper must be handled further:

The cellulose, composed of sugar polymers, must remain, while the lignin, which colors the pulp brown, must be removed. This is usually done by using chlorinated aromatic compounds, which are both toxic and carcinogenic, and major polluters of the environment - especially in major paper manufacturing areas such as Scandinavia. Laws in some countries have limited the amounts of chlorine that may be used; thus forcing the paper companies to look for alternative whiteners. Most enzymes are active at neutral or acidic pH and at relatively low temperatures (below 45 degrees Centigrade). But conditions in paper mills are more extreme than these. Dr. Yuval Shoham of the Technion's faculty of food engineering and biotechnology headed the team that developed the use of hemicellulase enzymes (natural proteins that act as a catalyst in biochemical reactions) for this

First they isolated bacteria capable of producing suitable enzymes, cultivated them in the lab, and manufactured industrial quantities of them.

After five years work, the Shoham team found hemicellulases can function under basic (pH9) conditions and under temperatures as high as 65 degrees.

The technique is now being commercialized, and Shoham believes the world's paper industry will soon use the enzymes to minimize, and eventually eliminate, the use of chlorine for paper bleaching, thus contributing to a better environ-

INSIGHTFUL VOTING For the first time in the US. blind voters in a Texas county have cast their ballots without having someone else in the voting booth to help them. An audio ballot, in which listeners hear a tapé-recorded voice over headphones and punch in their selections, was introduced in El Paso County. The ballots, available in all 155 voting precincts, are the result of a precedent-setting class-action lawsuit filed two years ago. The suit had been filed by a blind woman who complained that having a voting official in the booth with her barred her from having a secret ballot, and that the person often made derogatory comments on her choices.

The county elections office equipped each precinct with a regular cassette-tape player, headphones and tapes that include the names of candidates and instructions on how to punch the ballots. Listeners follow along and find the appropriate category by counting the holes on the metal slot holding the ballot. They vote by poking a hole into the ballot next to the desired candidate's name. The equipment cost around $10,000, and voting officials as well as blind voters were pleased, even though the process takes a little seems as if the Cairo economic conference was a success as far as Israel's business delegation to the gathering is concerned. The heads of some of Israel's leading industrial concerns are reported as saying that a new era has begun in Egyptian-Israeli business relations and that the unofficial boycott which has blocked trade ties between the two nations for 15 years has disappeared. Manufacturers' Association president Dan Propper talked in Cairo of "a real positive tension in the air, of people who know that they can find potential partners here."

Given the crisis atmosphere fostered by Egypt in the run-up to the gathering, and the unsubtle blackballing of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's planned visit to the conference. this positive turn of events is a welcome surprise. Although it is too early to count the conference's benefits to the Israeli economy in financial terms, the belief itself that Israelis can do business with Egyptians is exactly the type of development Israel's leaders hoped for when they signed the peace treaty with Egypt nearly two decades ago.

This change, however, is not necessarily connected to the peace process. In fact, it seems to be taking place independent of it, linked more to Egypt's embrace of private enterprise and its move away from a centralized, governmentcontrolled economy than any metamorphosis on the part of Egypt's diplomatic decision-makers. Indeed, it seems as if the anti-Israel impulses of the Egyptian ruling elite have not dulled, as highlighted by the most distressing aspect of last week's conference: the arrest of Azzam Azzam, an Israeli citizen, on charges of espionage. Azzam was arrested a few days before the conference opened in what can only be described as a heavy-handed hint on the part of Egyptian authorities as to the dangers for Egyptian citizens of doing business with Israel.

Azzam, from the Druse village of Maghar in Galilee, works for the joint Egyptian-Israeli. Tefron textile factory as a mechanic, spending much of his time in Cairo to mind machinery at the Egyptian plant. When he was abducted outside his hotel over a week ago, the Egyptian authorities initially refused to confirm he had

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR I

OBJECTIVITY

ESPITE the best efforts of Egypt's been detained, preferring to leak details of his Foreign Ministry, among others, it capture to the Arabic press. Indeed, the official announcement of Azzam's arrest was delayed until the conference's opening day so as to ensure the maximum deterrent effect for those Egyptians considering joint ventures with Israeli firms. This is not the first time an Israeli businessman has been arrested on trumped up spying charges; in 1992 antique dealer David Ovitz languished for several months in the Toura prison before his release at Israel's insistence. As in the Ovitz case, Israel has categorically insisted that Azzam is an innocent businessman, with no connection to Israel's secret

In what can only be described as reaching new heights of hutzpa (the old definition tells the story of a man, convicted of killing his parents, pleading for mercy from the judge on the grounds that he is an orphan), President Hosni Mubarak sought to blame the Israeli media for Azzam's continued detention. ,

In a number of interviews with Israeli reporters published this weekend, Mubarak insisted he was unaware of Azzam's arrest until reports surfaced in Israel's media, adding Azzam would have been released had the news of his detention not been made public. "If it wasn't for the publicity," Mubarak said to Yediot Aharanot's Smadar Perry, "we could have dealt with this issue differently. We could have come and told you: This young man did this and that, take him away."

While Mubarak's first remark is startling enough in its claim that Israel's media is better informed as to the actions of Egypt's security service than the president himself, his second statement is simply outrageous. Mubarak, who always uses the excuse of a free press to explain away the virulent anti-Israel caricatures in the Cairo papers, knows that no self-respecting Israeli media outlet would ignore reports of an Israeli arrested in Egypt. To blame media openness for the incarceration of an innocent man is akin to the rulers of old executing the messengers who came bearing bad tidings.

If the change Israeli businesspeople say they detected in Cairo last week is for real, one hopes it will also reach the presidential palace in the very near future.

Sir. - The problem with the IBA and Gil Kopatch is that they are using the wrong argument odd to justify Kopatch's televised irreverence. Rather than utilizing the controversy as a springboard to legislation defining the parameters of freedom of speech, the parties involved. including Kopatch himself, are playing on their viewers' prejudices against religious Jews and their paranoia of religious political power. In doing so, they build up Kopatch into an artist, a man of the people who "speaks in his audience's language," and a master satirist. In truth, he is probably a run-of-the-mill stand-up comic. whose lack of true cleverness is compensated by bathroom humor and racist jokes - jokes which would never be given airplay, even in countries where freedom of far by the "Kopatch team" is that Kopatch's "Torah portion" is really an attempt to bring secular Jews closer to Torah, and that the lewd, disgraceful picture Kopatch paints of the weekly Torah portion is actually an expression of his deep love and attachment to it. And finally, am I wrong in presuming that, if Kopatch made a similar show about the Koran and its prophet, you would take the IBA to task for extreme insensitivity to the Arab public and misuse of public funds, or am I to assume that you would lecture the Arab minority about freedom of speech, trusting the public's ability to judge for themselves the value of humanizing Mohammed changing channels? MORDECHAI LERNER

WRONG PLACE

Sir. - Regarding the Gil Kopatch controversy, a major point seems to have been forgotten: there is a time and a place for everything. Kopatch's parody may be hysterically funny in a comedy club. But it is clear that transmitting a send-up of the weekly Torah portion over the airwaves of the Jewish State is deeply offensive to many Jews. As to your point in the editorial of November 7 that those who would be most offended by the skit would not or need not watch it when Black Muslim Louis Farrakhan made his now infamous remark about Judaism being a "gutter religion," he was not addressing an audience of Jews, but world Jewry was nonetheless upset. Following your vein of logic, Jews are wrong to be worried if bookstores sell copies of Mein Kampf - after all, we can simply choose not to buy it, can't decline in motivation conscript-age Israelis and veteran reservists regarding IDF service are as disturbing as they were predictable. And much light has been shed on the reasons for the drop in motiva-

Some say our youth and the older reservists lack the basic patriotism and responsibility of those who built and sustained this nation. Others say their lack of motivation is merely an expression of disappointment over where this nation is headed, peace process or no peace process.

In my opirion the decrease in motivation among the young and not-so-young can be traced to the current era of perceived financial and geopolitical prosperity and to the distorted conclusions these would-be soldiers have.

What has happened is that the current "days of plenty" and atmosphere of possible political reconciliation with the Arabs have created a vacuum at the expense of those nation-building values we used to cherish.

Israelis are currently enjoying an energetic economy with rising and more expendable income and a completely Western consumer goods market.

A quick look at the steep rise in intrinsic values of our nationhood ments, cellular phones and lavish vacations points to a nation that is upwardly mobile, with an unquenched thirst for more,

Unfortunately this rising affluence has had adverse effects on our society, and its chief victim has been a widespread abandonment of our national and community responsibilities.

Let me make it clear that I am not longing for a return to the days when we had to ration butter and gasoline, when we felt the threat of Arab armies massed on our borders. Certainly, the sharp rise in our standard of living is not in itself regrettable.

But what has happened is that many Israelis are drowning in a sea of indulgence; they have forgotten what the very essence of life in this country is all about.

I am talking about putting the very basic needs of the state before the conquest of the material, before the continuous goal of acquiring that fancier car or more luxurious penthouse.

New and pending peace deals with our neighbors have led many to believe that Israel no longer faces the political and military threats it once did. This in turn has led to the feeling that army service is no longer as necessary as it

In short, our economic progress and increased political dialogue with our adversaries have prevented our seeing what was once so very clear: that this country's

The message: Pursuing personal gain is compatible with national commitment with avoiding national responsibility? How can we correct this problem of lack of motivation? Is there any hope of restoring lost values? The answer is yes - but only through the proper mix of education and refocusing personal and national objectives. WE MUST realize that financial prosperity and national obligation aren't diametrically opposed. In fact the only reason we can sit back and enjoy our success is because those before us made a sacrifice, often paying with their lives, to ensure that we had a viable and stable nation on which to build. I recently appointed a Ministry of Education team to prepare special school programs intended to raise our young people's motivation to serve in the IDF. These programs, to be created in vation-poor army reservists have somehow lost the message that striving for personal gain is compatible with working to keep the wheels of the nation spinning. As an interim solution we must redouble our efforts, both at home and in the classroom, to remind ourselves of our most elementary national needs and of the duty and privilege - of serving in the IDF and defending our country. As an educator I have witnessed a most unfortunate decline in the social values of our youth. This is a youth whose educational system has failed to meet the challenge of reinforcing the very basic message of a citizen's commitment to his or her country.

My Ministry's Administration for Values Education, now in formarion, will expend a great deal of effort in inculcating these lost values of civic responsibility. Hopefully it will constitute a first step in overcoming the motivation problem.

As minister of education I have given my approval and active support to a new and innovative project developed by Brig.-Gen. (res.) Ron Pecker to encourage Israeli youth to join the IDF and volunteer for combat units.

The project will be in full swing nationwide from January 1997, then some 100 reservé officer begin volunteer activities with high school pupils across the country. I have given explicit instructions to all ministry district directors to give the reserve officers every assistance.

Is it any wonder that young people and army reservists belonging to the religious sector have con-tinued their strong tradition of army volunteerism? It's simply because their entire existence as religious Jews is based upon the daily routine of studying and practicing Jewish and Zionist

Israelis have, perhaps more than any other nation, earned the right to breath easier as far as daily survival as a state is concerned, the right to enjoy all the luxuries the world has to offer.

But they need to remind themselves that there is an ineradicable link between enjoying these luxuries and the need to sustain them.

OME things are worth getting into a culture clash over. Bar-llan Street. Gil Kopatch. But the Administration for Values Education? This is a rumble over nothing. The National Religious Party warned us during the campaign that it was going to turn Israeli kids into real Jews, and now they've got to deliver. So Education Minister Zevulun Hammer, head of the NRP, came up with the Administration for Values Education.

The religious right is swooning. This is it, they're saying, this is what's going to save these kids. The secular left is stocking up on canned goods and bottled water, they're afraid to let their kids out of the house lest they be scooped up by the Administration for Values Education and turned into little national religious robots.

Meanwhile, does anybody know what this thing is going to do? Hammer, Avraham Lifschitz (the former head of Bnei Akiva who's probably going to run the administration) and the bureaucrats in the Education Ministry can tell you plenty about the lack of values among Israeli youth. They can go on for days about what the administration intends to give Israeli pupils: Jewish values, Zionist values, democracy. tolerance, civility, and the motivation to become IDF fighters.

But how? How is it going to be an improvement on all the programs the school system already runs to produce good. Jewish. civil, democratic boys and girls?

Hammer and Co. have two answers: One, we don't know what the program is going to be. but we're appointing a committee. Two, the beauty of our plan is that it brings all our existing programs - which teach Jewish education, democracy, traffic safety and family life - under one roof.

They're appointing a committee. They're restructuring. My PR detector is buzzing like 10,000 bees.

What else does a bureaucracy

The education minister's new project is what bureaucrats call action do when it has a problem it can't solve? Besides appointing a committee, which can never hurt, it moves departments around. Departments, units, divisions - they all get changed around. People get new titles, new job descriptions, new letter-

ONE YEAR the theme is "bringing everybody under one roof. The problem, you see, is that there's a lot of duplication. Now there will be more coordination. more unity.

Nothing happens. Whatever was wrong before remains just as

A few years later someone decides that the problem is overcentralization. We've lost touch with the grassroots. We're going to split up into smaller, units, which will work better than they did when everybody was under one roof.

This can go on for centuries. It's what a bureaucracy calls action. And this is the game the Administration for Values Education is playing. Hammer, in his third term as education minister, knows the schools do a lousy job teaching values. The Education Ministry appointed committees which told if that. The Shenhar Committee found the schools a failure at teaching Judaism, the Kremnitzer and Bar-Tal committees found them a failure at teaching democracy and citizenship.

I don't know if any committee has appraised the schools' teaching of traffic safety as a value, but from the way young Israelis drive, I doubt it would bring back a glowing report. And however much Israeli youth value family life, I'm sure they learned it at home, not in class.

But everybody knows Israeli kids have lost their values, and that education is the answer. So we're going to have to endure the Administration for Values Education.

I suggest that everybody stop fighting over it. I especially advise my secular leftist brethren to stop worrying about it. The only thing that worries me is that when the kids are tested on the values they've learned, they're going to be cheating left and right - and Hammer will announce that he's appointing another committee.

FBI leaks may be key to Jewell's case

By Max Glitter

the FBI's now-exonerated suspect in L V L the Atlanta Olympics bombing. They pity him for his ordeals with agents who went to great lengths to trick him into confessing. But they also doubt that Jewell has a case against the FBI. After all, it is virtually impossible to sue a government agency. And Jewell will have an equally hard time suing the press, the argument goes, because he was already a public figure when he was tagged as a suspect.

But Jewell may have a way out, if he tries a novel strategy. The media will defend themselves against claims of malice by saying they relied on some authoritative, if anonymous, government source who told them Jewell was a suspect. The FBI and other government investigators have, of course, denied they leaked the story. If they are right, Jewell can sue the Atlanta Journal-Constitution for recklessness. But surely Jewell will try for pre-trial discovery, which should expose who leaked the story.

Jewell might stand a chance against the government, moreover, if he focuses his case not so much on this particular leak as on the Justice Department's long history of failing to pursue leakers in its midst. (When was the last time you read about an indictment of a prosecutor or FBI agent for leaking grand jury materials to the press?) His suit against the government might fare better if he portrayed the Justice Department as creating an environment that routinely overlooks, and racitly encourages its employees to violate, the rules concerning leaks. It creates a permissive atmosphere, analogous to the "hostile working environment" in sexual-harassment cases.

This strategy could get at an intractable and chronic problem: the damage to people's rights and reputations wrought by government leaks.

Government leaks are normally challenged by defense attorneys during ongoing investigations or prosecutions. But judges are extremely reluctant even to investigate the government at that stage for fear of jeopardizing a pending case. As a defense attorney during the financial scandals of the late '80s, I witnessed firsthand what typically happens - nothing. Despite massive, continuing leaks about what should have been secret SEC and grand jury investigations - some of which could only have come from government sources - defendants could only get courts to defer the problem of leaks until after trial. When the proceedings were over, however, the leaks were never pursued. Defendants who were vindicated wanted only to put the entire matter behind them. And there was little public sympathy for convicted financiers claiming their rights were impinged by some government agent who, ost people feel sorry for Richard Jewell, after all, did help put the rich felon in jail.

> The Jewell case is different. Judging by his press conference, he does not want to put the case behind him. And public sympathy is with Jewell. It is the perfect occasion to address the plight of the accused - and the unaccused - who are

Jewell might stand a chance against the government, moreover, if he focuses his case not so much on this particular leak as on the Justice Department's long history of failing to pursue leakers in its midst.

Let's be clear, first of all, that leaks violate the law and seriously prejudice suspects and defendants. Federal statutes prohibit disclosure of information on grand jury investigations. The Constitution guarantees due process as well as a secret grand jury proceeding for serious criminal charges. As any criminal-defense attorney can attest, leaks to the media prejudice the potential jury pool. (Indeed, many argue that is precisely why prosecutors engage in leaks.) Leaks and the resulting media coverage can even affect judges. An unusually high percentage of convictions in the Wall Street scandals were reversed. The leaks, the consequent media frenzy and the public's outrage undoubtedly inhibited some judges from dismissing at the outset attenuated indictments and overreaching prosecutorial theories.

Can anything be done about these kind of leaks? Well, maybe. Laws against leaking are almost never enforced, for obvious reasons: Each of the two principal institutions in our society thar expose wrongful conduct has a conflict. The media have a vested interest in ensuring a continuing flow of leaks and go to great lengths to keep the identity of leakers secret. Similarly, every government agency has an interest in protecting its own. Self-investigation by government agencies is notoriously unreliable. No one was indicted, fired, suspended or even identified for leaking stories about the financial investigations in the '80s.

What is needed is an independent force, such as an invigorated Office of Professional Responsibility in the Justice Department, with the teeth and the will to pursue leakers and a real © 1996, The New Republic.

prospect of public recognition for successfully performing that job. Neither that nor any other reform is likely to occur without a transformation in public attitudes. The leakers of government investigations must be deglorified.

After the Pentagon Papers and Watergate, the media persuaded society that government leaks are essential to democratic functioning. But this position has little merit in a criminal investigation, where it tramples due process and privacy rights. The public, the media and the courts need to understand that leakers are not always courageous whistleblowers; in many cases, they are opportunistic abusers of positions of trust.

The legal and ethical posture of an FBI agent, a Georgia state investigator or a prosecutor who leaks information about a pending investigation is the same as that of a person who passes on "tips" or inside information about a corporate takeover. The seminal Supreme Court case about insider trading, Dirks v. SEC, made clear that a person who acquires confidential financial information through a position of trust and then conveys that information to another for personal gain is guilty of insider trading. And so, for example, an employee of a law firm is guilty of insider trading if he learns of a possible takeover and then passes that confidential information to a friend in hopes of gaining either a direct immediate benefit, such as a share of the financial gains, or what is called a "reputational" benefit, such as enhanced stature in the eyes of the "tippee" and the possibility of one day obtaining a favor from the tippee.

Like the law firm employee, the government leaker acquires confidential information through a position of trust. He then offers that information to the media either for an immediate gain, such as winning a prosecution by prejudicing the jury pool, or some "reputational" benefit, such as cultivating a relationship with a reporter who might later write a favorable story. The media's "defense" of government leaks — that they inform the public early about potential prosecutions - also has a parallel in the case of the inside trader. Many economists believe that insider trading is beneficial because it sends "signals" to the market that raise the price of a takeover stock, thereby helping those who otherwise would sell at too low a price.

If we start calling these leakers what they are - insider traders - perhaps their standing with the public will be diminished. Only then will the incidence of such leaks be reduced.

Texaco tapes should be warning to top executives

By Alan Dershowitz

isten in on the following conversation and then guess who is speaking. The context is a meeting about how to deal with certain records that allegedly contain evidence of improper conduct. "We're gonna purge the [expletive] out of these books..." We have "two versions [and] there is no point in even keeping the restricted versions anymore. All it could do is get us in trouble." "Let me shred this thing and any other restrictive version like it."

No, it's not the Nixon White House, or the Mafia, or the Cali Cartel. These are the tape-recorded voices of senior executives from the Texaco Corp., discussing how to respond to a formal request for information and documentation they had received in a lawsuit charging that Texaco had engaged in racial discrimination. As if to prove the charges true, some of the executives describe the plaintiffs as "niggers," "porch monkeys," "orangutans" and "black jelly beans."

What we have here is a combination of illegal racial bigotry and criminal cover-up. These executives knew exactly what it is they were doing. One instructed another that if a piece of evidence was favorable, "you'd want to retain it." As another put it, "I don't want to be caught up in a cover-up. I don't want my own Watergate here."

Well, they have been caught in a cover-up. It turns out that one of the executives, who was subsequently fired, had his tape recorder turned on during the meeting. Had there been no recording, you can be sure these executives would have sworn up and down that they shredded no documents. They would have backed each other in the way that common criminals and too many cops cover for each other. But there is a tape. And what is Texaco doing about it? Worse than nothing. They are continuing the cover-up to make sure that the blame stops before it gets to the very top.

The entire enterprise of feigning 'internal,' 'independent' 'investigations' should be seen for what it is: a phony public relations gambit to try to pre-empt a really independent criminal investigation by prosecutors who are not on the payroll of those being investigated.

Like other corporations in trouble, Texaco has hired a former prosecutor to conduct an internal investigation. They call it an "extensive independent investigation," but who do you think is paying for it? And to whom will the "independent investigator" report? The very people who are trying to keep the blame from reaching them.

I could write the report myself now, without hearing a single witness. It always comes out the same way. A couple of middle-level executives (these caught red-handed in the tape) are thrown to the wolves. but the highest-level executives (those paying the legal fees) are found to be entirely without fault. Indeed they are "outraged" at the conduct of their subordinates. The fired executives are given a good severance package — with lots of stock — to purchase their silence.

How can I be so sure? Because I've seen it happen dozens of times before. It is a well-worn corporate ploy. This time its results are even more predictable, because of the nature of the "independent" lawyer they have hired. He is Michael Armstrong, who has been Sen. Al D'Amaro's consigliari for years and who himself has been repeatedly accused of questionable ethical behavior on several occasions (once by me). He is now involved in a lawsuit with the author James Stewart over serious allegations made by Stewart regarding Armstrong's ethical conduct in a junk-bond case. Armstrong is a gun for hire by any corporation willing to pay his legal fee. Were he to accuse the higher-ups of criminal conduct, no corporation would ever hire him again to whitewash them. He would burn his bridges, and he is not about to do that.

The entire enterprise of feigning "internal," "independent" "investigations" should be seen for what it is: a phony public relations gambit to try to pre-empt a really independent criminal investigation by prosecutors who are not on the payroll of those being investigated. No one should pay any attention to them, and the stockholders of Texaco should demand that their money not be wasted in an effort to insulate higher-ups.

A grand jury is now investigating the Texaco cover-up. There are almost certain to be indictments. The tapes seem to show a conspiracy to obstruct justice. Now the question is how far up the corporate ladder did the cover-up go. Good prosecutors should be able to find that out. They can start by indicting those who were at the meeting and then offering them deals and use immunity to testify about conversations with higher-ups.

The real story is that the Texaco fiasco may be only the tip of a very large iceberg. It is widely believed that many corporate executives routinely "purge" and "shred" files during litigation. Some have been caught, but few have been punished. These "smoking gun" tapes should set off alarm bells in the offices of sleepy prosecutors who too often fail to take seriously these crimes in the suites.

U.S. election maintains political balance of forces

By JOHN JUDIS

S. House Speaker Newt Gingrich said that this election could be the most important since 1896 - the election that inaugurated a 36-year Republican majority. But it probably won't make the pages of most history books. Like the election of 1984, when Ronald Reagan won in a landslide, but when Democrats retained the House and gained two Senate seats, it reaffirmed the existing balance of political forces in the country. It was a vote against dramatic change and for a continuation of a center-right government.

If a realignment or revolution were to occur, as Gingrich prophesied, the circumstances underlying politics — the relations between regional businesses, between business and labor, between small and large business and between ethnic and social groups — would have to shift significantly. That has not occurred. Instead, American politics has continued to gravitate toward the same position. Former Carter pollster Pat Caddell was the first to define this position as a combination of social liberalism and fiscal conservatism, but it goes beyond purely budgetary stinginess.

From the late '30s, when the New Deal ran aground, through the Nixon administration, there was a center-left standoff on core economic sistes between business and its allies, on the one hand, and labor and its allies on the other. This standoff meant that business got tax cuts and generous subsidies but that labor, consumer groups and minorities got job bills, guaranteed health care for senior citizens, increases in Social Security payments and legislation regulating workplace safety. Then the ground shifted. In the first two years of the Carter administration, when Democrats had a "veto-proof majority," business groups were nevertheless able to defeat laborlaw reform and the establishment of a new Consumer Protection Agency. Business' newfound clout, which reflected labor's decline and the emergence of interest groups such as the Business Roundtable, spelled the end of center-left government and the beginning of a center-right regime. While business organizations could not repeal OSHA or privatize Social Security, they could block any new spending or regulatory initiatives along these lines. At the same time, Congress had to heed growing popular majorities in favor of cultural and social reforms that came out of the '60s — from environmental protection to abortion rights and gun control. Support for these issues cut across class lines, but was concentrated among middle- and upper-middle-class Americans, who were likely to respond to direct-mail appeals.

When the White House or Congress has tried to defy this economic and social consensus, it has been quickly repudiated. The AFL-CIO and its congressional backers had to give up on labor-law reform, and they couldn't even get Congress to pass a striker-replacement bill. On the other side, Ronald Reagan had to replace his Secretary of the Interior and director of the Environmental Protection Agency with moderates acceptable to the environmental movement. Reagan was also careful to talk up, but do nothing about, sanctioning school prayer or outlawing abortion. Clinton had to abandon his attempt to expand health services to the working poor and to limit the prerogatives of the health and insurance industries. And Gingrich and the House Republicans had to give up their attempt to gut environmental laws and to raise Medicare premiums while reducing benefits.

Early this summer, it seemed that this election might actually alter the status quo. By shutting down the government, Gingrich and the House Republicans had raised the specter of radical conservatism. It looked like Democrats could run against Gingrich the way they used to run against Herbert Hoover. During the primary, the Christian Coalition, which is anathema to many voters outside the deep South, had increased its visibility within the Republican Party. And in the presidential race, Clinton had a 73-year-old opponent whose own party seemed lukewarm on him and who had opposed unpaid family and medical leave.

Even more important, the AFL-CIO under its new president, John Sweeney, had actively entered the election. In the past, the federation had been content to give money to candidates and send out endorsements to their members, but this time it threw hundreds of staff and $35 million into targeted congressional races. Labor's new strategy threatened, in effect, to create a countervailing force to business predominance over both parties. And labor's first efforts at running ads worked dramatically. It got endangered moderate Republicans like Connecticut's Chris Shays to champion an increase in the minimum wage. If the election had been held in mid-July or so, the Democrats might have regained majorities in both the Senate and the House, and labor and its allies would have wielded considerable clout with these new majorities.

But over the last two months the election turned around. The Republicans in Congress, led by Trent Lott, the new majority leader, worked out an accommodation with Clinton to pass welfare reform, the minimum wage and the Kassebaum-Kennedy health care bills — and then ran on these bipartisan accomplishments. They abandoned the anti-government thetoric of the 1994 election; and they claimed to be friends of clean air and water.

The Republican National Committee and the Republican Senate and House campaign committees also took advantage of business support and of a June Supreme Court ruling permitting independent expenditures to mount a furious ad campaign during the last three weeks of the election. RNC Chairman Haley Barbour complained repeatedly about the AFL-CIO pumping $35 million into the campaign, but business groups contributed about $242 million. Roughly two-thirds of this money went to Republican candidates and to the Republican national committees. The Republican committees raised $400 million for this election compared to $250 million for the Democrats. And, in the campaign's last month, they spent it to reverse the tide toward a Democratic Congress.

Another factor that prevented Democrats from winning Congress was the faltering Clinton campaign. In early October, Clinton appeared on his way to a landslide that could have rivaled Lyndon Johnson's victory over Barry Goldwarer in 1964. A win that size would have shifted at least four or five Senate seats and at least a dozen more House seats into the Democratic column. But in the second week of October, stories began emerging about DNC fundraiser John Huang's efforts to woo foreign contributors. These stories were damning in themselves, but they also raised the specter of future investigations that could cripple a second Clinton term.

As it stands, neither Clinton nor the Republicans in Congress will take office with a clear mandare. Clinton campaigned on his economic record and on a promise of innocuous, incremental reforms such as the extension of unpaid family and medical leave. Congressional Republicans attempted to distance themselves from their Contract with America without proposing a new contract. By the campaign's close, they were even withdrawing their support for Dole's 15-percent tax cut.

Clinton will have mouble getting his own way among Democrats. As a lameduck president, he will have to endure Democrats jockeying for position in 2000. The Republican leadership, meanwhile, will be hamstrung in Congress. Republicans slightly increased their majority in the Senate, but largely by filling seats vacated by conservative Democrats. The remaining Democrats (who are slightly to the left of the previous group) will be able to filibuster any right-wing initiatives. In the House, Gingrich will command a smaller majority, and a quarter to a third of it will be composed of Republicans such as John Hostettler in Indiana, Mark Neumann in Wisconsin, or Jon Fox in Pennsylvania, who barely defeated Democratic challengers.

If there is a precedent for 1997, it is probably 1996. Clinton will be able to win Congress's support for incremental social reforms and for pro-business trade initiatives with China and Latin America. The Republicans will probably agree to putting Medicare and Social Security in the hands of a bipartisan commission that will produce proposals that are amenable to the insurance industry, but don't obviously or immediately gouge senior citizens. And they will quarrel over the details of a balanced-budger plan, while seeking compromises that avoid achieving a balanced budget during their political lifetime.

There are several things, however, that could upser this placid scenario. But even these possibilities still might not alter the drift of American politics. A political realignment may be in the offing, but it is certainly not in sight.

Just say no to crack conspiracy investigation

By Charles Lane

emember the hellish ghetto crack house in Spike Lee's film "Jungle Fever"? The director populated the scene with the gaunt forms of white users, sucking grimly on their glass pipes. Lee was trying to remind his audience that, media stereotypes notwithstanding, there is nothing exclusively "black" about drug abuse. And he had a point. Blacks have indeed suffered disproportionately from crack addiction and the attendant violent crime. But in absolute numbers, the majority of drug users in the United States have always been white. Crack - a follow-up to the "free-basing" phenomenon that swept the wealthy white precincts of Southern California in the late '70s and early '80s - has addicted many more whites than blacks.

Or maybe that's just what the CIA wants us to believe. After all, no less a source than The San Jose Mercury News has revealed that Nicaraguans working for the CIA introduced crack into the ghetto of South-Central Los Angeles in the mid-'80s as part of a scheme to finance the contras - even if it meant devastation for black America. So forget such obvious questions as why the agency would have decided to carry out its genocidal plan by means of a substance that wreaked so much havoc among whites, too. Forget Spike Lee's plea for a more balanced view of crack's racial impact. Jesse Jackson, Representative Maxine Waters, Dick Gregory and Baltimore Mayor Kurt Schmoke have all called for an investigation into the charges. So has General Barry McCaffrey, President Clinton's drug czar. CIA Director John Deutch said he knew of no evidence to support the Metcury News' claims, but ordered his inspector general, Fred Hitz, to get to the bottom of the matter, anyway. The Senate Intelligence Committee, under chairman Arlen Specter, has already held hearings on it, and is promising more.

Now some conspiracy theories at least touch on enough elements of plausible wrongdoing to merit investigation. O.J. was not framed by racists in the LAPD, but the Mark Fuhrman tapes certainly suggested the need for another look at that department. About a third of the probable perpetrators in the recent church burnings are black; but the presence of a couple of Klansmen among the suspects, together with the frightening echoes of the '60s and the fact that it was disproportionately black churches getting torched constituted adequate grounds for federal scrutiny.

The notion of a CIA plot to finance the contras and kill blacks with crack, on the other hand, is illogical on its face. And as it turns out, the evidence for it is non-existent. A Washington Post article debunking the Mercury News piece pointed out, among other things, that drug kingpin "Freeway Rick" Ross — the key figure in the Mercury News' account - had been selling crack in Los Angeles for four years before he even mer Oscar Danilo Blandon Reyes, the Nicaraguan contra supporter the Mercury News calls "the Johnny Appleseed of crack in California." Not even Jack Blum, the cabal-seeking former investigator for Sen. John Kerry's contra-drug subcommittee during the late '80s, buys the Mercury News' conspiracy theory. The Mercury News and Gary Webb, the author of the three-part series, now say they never intended to charge the CIA with a deliberate plan to target blacks. This may be true, strictly speaking, but it sounds pretty disingenuous given the insinuating language of Webb's piece ("the |contra| financiers... mer with CIA agents both before and during the time they were selling the drugs in L.A.") and the paper's sensationalistic choice of illustration for the Internet version of the piece - a CIA emblem superimposed over a photo of a black man smoking crack. Conceding error, the paper has now withdrawn this graphic.

If there were a CIA conspiracy to commit crack-genocide, would the conspirators have left a paper trail for Fred Hitz to follow?

So what's left, exactly, to investigate? Well, perhaps, in its anti-Communist zeal, the CIA did turn a blind eye to drug trafficking by its Central American agents and associates. But the "blind eye" scenario, which was thoroughly explored in the Senate committee investigation led by Blum and by Senator Kerry won't be any easier to trace now, after the evidence has had another decade to get cold. Anyway, the charge mainly reflects naivete about the inherent tradeoffs of criminal justice and intelligencegathering. Every day, law enforcement types stand by and observe drug deals in progress, in order to gather evidence that can be used for later busts. Every day they strike plea bargains to let smaller-time drug dealers go free in order to procure their testimony against bigger fish.

From Korea to Kabul, American intelligence agencies have done much the same thing in the pursuit of missions given them by policy makers. The disproportionate focus on contra drug dealing suggests that what really bothers the critics is not the agency's dubious moral tradeoffs, but rather the objective - getting rid of the Sandinistas - invoked to justify them.

Besides, if there were a CIA conspiracy to commit crack-genocide, would the conspirators have left a paper trail for Fred Hitz to follow? No CIA, or even "independent," investigator can ever lay these allegations to rest. Any findings will immediately be attacked as part of an ever-widening cover-up. Remember how the JFK conspiracy buffs reacted to the "independent" Warren Commission?

Deutch, Specter and company know this. They just figure the heat will be easier to deflect if they can at least claim to have done due diligence. But there are costs to this charade and they are not limited to the millions of tax dollars that will be wasted. The crack sideshow diverts attention and resources from truly necessary reforms in the post-Cold War intelligence apparatus, even as countless work-a-day civil servants — the real people behind what Maxine Waters calls "Mr. CIA" - have to sweat out lie-detector tests and hire lawyers in the futile effort to placate investigators.

And society as a whole pays a price every time obvious lies and crankery are legitimized by the earnest attention of senior government officials and leading newspapers. This is a cost to which the black community is especially vulnerable. Waters, Jackson and company are not only manipulating the understandable sorrow and frustration of people who have suffered cruelly from the drug epidemic. They are insulting their intelligence by papering over the complexities of the drug crisis.

But the propagators of the CIA-crack conspiracy are not particularly concerned with getting at the truth. Still less are they concerned with practical remedies for government misfeasance. Rather, they are intent on tearing down the legitimacy of government institutions in order to build up their own short-term political prospects. Perhaps it's too late now to stop the pointless CIA-crack investigations. But next time an accusation as patently bogus as this one comes along, accompanied by a not-so-spontaneous clamor for an investigation, let's hope government officials have the courage to just say no.

Republicans maintain popularity despite Democrats' predictions

By Robert Novak

The early-evening burial of Sen. Bob Smith of New Hampshire on election Tuesday was premature, and so was much of the analysis springing from it. The uncompromisingly conservative Smith, in presumed defeat, briefly became the metaphor for supposed voter revulsion against conservative excesses of the 104th U.S. Congress.

The problem was that analysts who declared Smith defeated relied on faulty exit polls. Republicans reached these conclusions: The GOP is dead in the Northeast, even in traditionally conservative New Hampshire. Smith, said these hand-wringers, did not tell Granite State voters what they wanted to hear but symbolized for them his party's intransigence on abortion. "Bob Smith is part of our problem," a leading Republican strategist told me on election night.

It was all nonsense. That Smith in fact was re-elected reflected the remarkable success of the most controversial conservatives. Supposedly hard-headed Democratic political consultants last week jubilantly predicted the demise at long last of Sen. Jesse Helms, but the defiant North Carolinian was fairly comfortably elected to a

Even rambunctious right-winger Rep. Robert K. Dornan, despite multiple self-inflicted wounds (especially his ill-advised campaign for the presidency), ar this writing is hanging onto his Southern California district.

The truth is that Republicans dodged the bullet. Retention of Congress for the first time since 1928 came despite what is recognized inside the party as a perfectly dreadful presidential campaign in which Bob Dole and his staff tried to outdo each other in fecklessness.

Republican leaders of the 104th Congress, led by House Speaker Newt Gingrich, alienated the electorate as President Clinton outmaneuvered the GOP. For much of the year, voters were inundated by Democratic and labor union television advertising without a Republican response. Finally, an unprecedented gender gap gave nearly every Democratic candidate in the country a running head start.

For the Republicans to survive in the face of such handicaps suggests party strength that belies what the national polls have claimed all year. These surveys consistently showed a slight preference for a Democratic-controlled Congress, but Tuesday's exit polls revealed exactly the opposite view.

President Bill Clinton is blamed for this privately by Democratic operatives who complain that the president did not commit himself to bringing in a Democratic Congress once his own re-election was assured. His coartails proved no more useful than Richard Nixon's in 1972 or Ronald Reagan's in 1984. When Clinton paid a late campaign visit to New Hampshire, he could not bring in former Rep. Dick Swett against Smith or the two Democratic House candidates.

Clinton's abstinence from ideology, while instrumental in getting elected, hurt his party's congressional candidates. "The president did not give the people a convincing reason for electing a Democratic Congress," a leading Democrat told me. Nor was the ample Clinton war chest utilized in congressional races.

In the private opinion of key party strategists, whatever chance the Democrats may have had for regaining control of Congress was eliminated by the Indonesian fund-raising scandal late in the campaign. These strategists profess themselves to be absolutely stunned at Clinton's recklessness in fund-raising activity that not only affected the election outcome but also casts a long shadow over his second term.

Organized labor's $35 million television-radio campaign to regain Congress had distinct limitations. By branding a veteran Republican moderate such as Rep. James T. Walsh in Syracuse, N.Y., as an extremist and a pupper of Newt Gingrich, the massive AFL-CIO onslaught could only temporarily deflate the congressman's ratings. In the end, Walsh convinced his constituents that he had not suddenly been transformed into a right-wing monster. He won easily.

But in the candid opinion of sage Democratic observers, the infusion of labor money almost surely prevented more dramatic Republican gains. That suggests a bleak landscape for Democrats in the future that has been hidden by Clinton's receptive victory over a hopeless presidential opponent. They may long lament that Republicans dodged a bullet on Tuesday.

Rethinking the China-Israel relationship

China's social and economic development will bring benefits and lessons to Israel and the Middle East, Barry Rubin reports

Mao Tse-Tung ruled, everyone wore indigo-blue clothes, and there was no Israeli embassy. Today, Mao has a big tomb in the main square and a picture atop the imperial palace, downtown Beijing is a fashion parade, and our countries have normal relations.

Even the pronunciation of the capital's name has changed, from Peking to Beijing. More people live in this city alone than there are Jews in the world. And even Chinese scholars and officials are constantly astonished by Israel's small size and population.

For a Jew, traveling in Asia is a sort of psychological vacation. The burdens of history and prejudice in Christian or Moslem lands are lifted and replaced by naive curiosity. After explaining that my religion prohibited seafood, I was served a lobster. "It's not from the sea," my host proudly explained, "it's from a fish tank!"

Visiting China on a trip for the BESA Center for Strategic Studies was a good chance to rethink Israel-China relations.

Four factors shape China's views of Israel: First, there is the Communist regime's old, radical, Third World-oriented link to Arab states and the PLO. China was among the first and most consistent supporter of the PLO and especially its semi-Marxist factions. The fact that Mao wrote a couple of nasty sentences opposing Israel's existence cast a long shadow in Chinese foreign policy. Secondly, there is a favorable stereotype of Jews, who are seen as having much in common with the Chinese. Both peoples have a long history, a propensity to be scattered abroad, and respect for education. The Chinese respect Israeli technical, developmental, and military

HE last time I saw China, free public-opinion poll would show great support for Israel. Thirdly, China badly needs money and is willing to sell anything to anyone. This includes peddling military equipment including weapons of mass destruction - to radical Middle East regimes. China wants to end UN sanctions against Iraq, while helping Iran advance its nuclear technology. But since the Arab economic boycott has now vanished as a factor, China's wish to continue well over $2 billion annually in trade with Arab states or Iran does not inhibit good relations with Israel.

Finally, China wants stability in the Middle East to enhance its commercial links and show the world its new-found moderation.

Without publicly admitting it, the overnment is also womied about the spread of radical Islamic movements. Despite keeping good ties with Iran, China thinks the Iranians are trying to subvert its own large Moslem minority in the country's far west. Consequently, Chinese policy praises the Israel-Palestinian peace process and expresses wishes for its success. When PLO official Farouk Kaddoumi, a personal enemy of the peace process, visited Beijing last week, official media carefully stressed China's support for both sides' rights and hopes that they would work together to attain peace.

At the moment, the Chinese establishment's attitude is disparaging toward Israel. Former prime minis ters Shimon Peres and Yitzhak Rabin remain popular, while Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu is heatedly criticized as threatening the peace process in the same terms heard throughout the West.

Economic relations are more promising, though it's hard to develop them. In principle, like Korea, it is eager to expand other achievements. One expert said a trade, too. At around $220 million year, however, Israel-China trade is barely one-fifth of Israel's trade level with South Korea. This is due to China's relative poverty, fewer attractive exports, and bureaucratic difficulties in com-

CHINA, of course, is still a Communist state. But it's often hard to remember that fact. Indeed, there's no place anywhere more between systems than the world's most populous country. After seeing so much relative openness, the glimpse of Young Pioneers in uniform or the news media's stiff, official tone comes as a surprise. The government's key, frequently repeated, concept is to build China up within a socialist spirit. In other words, an economy with a large measure of free enterprise is paired with the regime's determination to hold tightly onto political control, repressing any outright opposition or open criticism.

The usual foreign reaction to this combination is that it cannot last, that either a tough dictatorship will return or democracy will triumph soon.

Recently, the former chairman of the US joint chiefs of staff, General Colin Powell, remarked that having a home shopping channel would soon convert the Chinese to capitalism. Yet this kind of simplistic thinking ignores powerful cultural forces and the system's staying power. The destruction of the Tiananmen Square democratic movement showed that tenacity and the relatively low level of active support for reform. It is quite possible that China could remain in this apparent limbo for several decades.

No matter how much one reads about China's economic development, the changes cannot be grasped until seen first hand.

There is construction everywhere, along with advertising and shops crammed with foreign-made goods. Naturally, most Chinese cannot afford these items. But there is clear progress and rising living standards, along with profiteering, serious air pollution, and even some beggars.

Shanghai, China's commercial center, dramatically embodies this enormous change. Downtown Shanghai is more modernized than most American cities. Along one bank of the city's river stand the beautiful, impressive old stone edifices of European colonialism. Across from them, on what until recently remained farmland, soar concrete-and-glass skyscrapers displaying the new era's corporate symbols: Samsung, Volkswagon,

The fact that many of the corporations are Japanese might have made this transition harder. After all, in the 1930s and 1940s, the Japanese army killed perhaps as many as 30 million Chinese. One Chinese person explained that his people have been Asia's Jews while the Japanese were the region's Germans. But any such discomfort seems to have little effect on Beijing's policy.

Equally, people in China don't seem bothered by the invasion of foreign ways and fashions, which a decade ago would have been decried in passionate terms as imperialistic. The very bulk of China's population and unique language make clear that its distinctive culture and identity will remain whatever outer garments are adopted.

Tourist shops sell busts of Mao and Communist memorabilia as souvenirs. Clearly, while the face on the poster is still that of Mao. the hands shaping contemporary China are those of Deng Xiaoping. Deng's most representative declaration was the anti-ideological dictum that it didn't matter if a cat was black or white as long as it caught mice.

With pragmatism for the sake of modernization the watchword, the big upcoming test is Hong Kong's fate. Hong Kong will revert to China in six months. Under its British masters, the tiny port city became a proportionately gigantic economic power while enjoying political freedom as well. The world will be watching in 1997 to see how much and messily Beijing curbs political rights and whether this will smash Hong Kong's com-

Without denying its massive problems and the long march ahead, China's dynamism and progress is startling. In coming years, it will focus on domestic development and local Asian issues. Still, China's transformation to a more moderate pragmatism could serve as a good model to those Middle East rulers still trying to preserve the kind of dogmatic extremism that China has

This is by no means a veterinary column, and any advice given here always places first and foremost the suggestion you contact a veterinarian, since he or she can help you best. What we give here is clear pointers of what should be considered a medical situation spaniel has a chronic problem with one eye. This condition has persisted for about four months. The eye is red and inflamed and no amount of ointment has helped. The inflammation is somewhat relieved by bathing the eye, and by using simple boric-acid eye drops. The dog is apparently uncomfortable, and often scratches at the eye which causes scratch wounds to the face.

One common cause of the condition described is a simple blockage of the tear duct of the inflamed eye. Since it only appeared at this age, it is most likely a blockage and not a true deformity. In this case, the eye, deprived of its proper continuous bath of fluid, becomes inflamed. This requires the attention of a skilled vetermary surgeon who can probe, and probably open the dysfunctional duct. For a time, it may be necessary to use eye drops several times a day, but once opened and healed the problem should disappear. Another eye problem involves cats. A reader writes that her twoyear-old Siamese cat has an infection in both eyes, and it just won't go away. This is not at all uncommon and should be treated by a veterinary. Usually antibiotic ointment or drops are prescribed, and sometimes steroids in the drops to prevent scarring of the cornea. Bathing the eyes with camomile tea, or a 5 percent boric-acid solution, offers some EADERS constantly contact relief, but real caution must be exercised to prevent the possibility of. transferring infection from one eye to the other. Never use the same solution or the same cotton ball on both eyes and be sure to wash the solution container in hot soapy water before transferring new solution.

Another problem is that of a fouryear-old imported Labrador retriever One reader writes a three-year-old seems well and bas a very good appetite, but coughs, the owner says, "like a two-pack smoker." The cough is present even when the dog sleeps, often waking it.

The first thing to do in this case is to have the dog thoroughly examined by a veterinary and to ask himspecifically to check for any obstruction in the throat, since some small object might be lodged in the trachea. Another real possibility is worms. Ordinary ascarides, or "round worms" as we call them, often cause a hacking cough, but since the dog is imported it could have been exposed to lung worms, not usually seen here, but common in Europe and in the US. These worms, however, usually produce a deep thoracic cough and not a hacking cough as described.

In every case, the dog's best friend is a competent veterinary surgeon who will try to get to the heart of the matter. As in the case of physicians practicing human medicine, some veterinaries are more thorough and conscientious than others, and in many cases, just as with humans, it's worthwhile getting a second opin-ion. If your veterinary is a serious person, he or she will not be insulted by this request. There are also veteriparians who specialize in certain subjects, and the best person to know who is the specialist for your particular problem is your own vetermari-

Arsenal own goal ends United's losing run

Liverpool climbs to second with 2-0 win at Leeds

LONDON (AP) - Manchester United's run of four losses in a victory over Arsenal yesterday thanks to a blunder by the Gunners' England goalkeepeer, David Seaman, and an own goal by Nigel Winterburn.

Seaman made a mess of a clearance and, when United's Nicky Butt fired a goalbound shot, Winterburn could only help the ball into the net for the only goal of the game.

The win before some 55,000 fairs at Old Trafford came after league losses to Newcastle (5-0), Southampton (6-3) and Chelsea (2-1) and a home defeat by Turkey's Fenerbahce in the European Champions League.

The result also boosts the team Wednesday's Champions League game against defending titlist Juventus, also at Old Trafford. The Reds stayed in sixth place, Goals by Robbie Earle and Marcus Gayle put Wimbledon in charge but Coventry, ousted from the League Cup on Wednesday by Division Two Gillingham, hit back through Noel Whelan and Dion Dublin.

Former England international goalkeeper Chris Woods, on loan to Southampton from MLS team Colorado Rapids, let in seven goals as Everton went on a scorng rampage at Goodison Park.

Gary Speed netted three, Russian international winger Andrei Kanchelskis two and Graham Stuart and Nick Barmby also tired goals past the veteran 'keeper in a 7-1 win. Norwegian forward Egil Ostenstad replied for the Saints who went 5-0 down after only 35 minutes. Promoted Leicester scored an

Gonzalez edges Rodriguez for AL MVP NEW YORK (Reuter) - Juan

Gonzalez, who led the Texas Rangers to the playoffs for the first time in the franchise's 36year history, was rewarded on Thursday with the American League's Most Valuable Player Award in one of the tightest votes

The Puerto Rican outfielder edged 21-year-old Alex Rodriguez, the whiz kid shortstop from the Seattle Mariners, by only three points - 290-287. Albert Belle of the Cleveland Indians was third with 228 points. It was the closest vote since 1960 when Roger Maris also won by three points, beating out New York Yankees teammate Mickey Mantle 225-222. In 1947, Joe Dimaggio of the Yankees edged Ted Williams of the Boston Red Sox by a single point, 202-201. Gonzalez became just the second Puerto Rican to win the AL MVP. joining reliever Willie Hernandez, who won with the Detroit Tigers in 1984.

The 27-year-old Gonzalez got 11 first-place votes and Rodriguez received 10 from the panel of members of the Baseball Writers Association of America, comprised of two writers from each AL city.

Belle finished with a pair of first-place votes, while Rodriguez's teammate Ken Griffey Jr. finished fourth with 188 points and four first-place

Gonzalez, the first outfielder to win the award since Oakland's Rickey Henderson in 1990, hit 314 with 47 home runs and 144 runs batted in in leading the Rangers to the Western Division

"I'll never forget the meeting I had with Juan in the outfield the day before spring training began," said Rangers manager John Oates. "Juan told me that he wanted to play for a championship team. We were able to win the American League West due in large part to the efforts of Juan Gonzalez and this award is most Mariner to win the MVP. The New York-born Miami resident claimed the batting title with a .358 average and unlike most shortstops also hit for power, leading the majors with 379 total bases in his first full season. He had 36 homers and 123 RBI, a major league-best 54 doubles and a league-leading 141 runs scored. The 30-year-old Belle, the volatile left fielder currently weighing his free-agent options. hit .311, belted 48 homers and paced the league with 148 RBI to lead Cleveland to the best regular-season record in the majors

ROME (Reuter) - Sport for all or food for researcher Gary Gardner wrote in a paper rate," Postel said.

The two may not be mutually exclusive ideals but when it comes to golf, the world's hungry get angry.

Motor sports have been attacked by environmentalists for pollution but only golf, exclusive and expensive, has been accused of taking food out of people's months. Experts from the Worldwatch Institute, an independent environmental research organization based in Washington DC, claimed at the U.N.-sponsored World Food Summit here that golf was increasingly a problem in The organization's figures show that in Thailand, 160 new courses were built between 1989 and 1994 - an average of one every 11 days with the majority on agricultural land "The golf courses most likely displaced between 17,000 and 34,000 hectares - an area that if planted in grain would have sup-ported hundreds of thousands of people."

entitled "Shrinking Fields."

South Korea had 86 operating golf courses in 1993-94 with another 200 planned and awaiting official approval.

In the early 1990s Japan, a country that cannot produce enough food to feed its own people, had 2,016 courses covering an area larger than metropolitan Tokyo and another 395 under construction or with permission to be built.

Worldwatch figures showed that Malaysia had tripled its golf courses in the past decade to more than 150.

Sandra Postel, a senior fellow at the institute and an expert on water resources, said that building golf courses led to forests and farmland being destroyed and also drained much-needed water from agricultural use in

"In rapidly developing third world countries, particularly in South East Asia that are catering to a growing tourist industry, golf ing for an upper elite" and contributed little courses are being put in place at a very rapid to the welfare of the 1.2 billion people in the

We're seeing hundreds of them going in now in South East Asia and not only are they occupying sometimes very important forest land and agricultural land but also requiring water for irrigation that could otherwise be used to grow crops.

"If you think about it, golf courses do require water at just about the same time that crops would, particularly in the dry season in these monsoon climates," she

"So they will directly compete with agri-culture for water supplies as water become increasingly scarce."

Postel said governments needed to assess the relationship between water and food and ensure water will be safeguarded to guarantee necessary levels of food production.

She said tourist earnings were important but believed that golf courses were "cater-food scarcity was increasingly affecting recreational activities.

"In the US we have 17,000 golf courses covering maybe two million acres or so," he

"A country like the US can have tens of millions of golfers but China will never be able to do that."

He said the industrialized province of Guangdong in southern China had already banned the construction of golf courses because there was not much land left to produce food.

Vietnam has also banned new golf cours-

Brown said that in many parts of the world golf would become an increasingly rare and difficult sport to play. "If food prices begin to rise, golf could become one of the first casualtics," he cau-

Red Wings sink Sharks, 5-1

DETROIT (Reuter) - Steve in its last 10 games. Yzerman celebrated his new contract with a goal and three assists and Mike Vernon stopped 24 shots as the Detroit Red Wings routed the San Jose Sharks 5-1 Friday.

Yzerman, who signed a fouryear contract extension earlier this week, continued his brilliance against the Sharks. In 18 career nicetings with San Jose, the Red Wings captain has seven goals and 23 points. The Sharks have never won a regular-season game in Detroit and are just 2-17-1 alltime against the Red Wings.

Greg Hawgood had the lone goal for San Jose, his first since March 24th, 1995.

Panthers 3, Islanders 3 Ray Sheppard and Stn Barnes scored 10 seconds apart late in the second period, lifting host Florida into a tie in a banle between the Atlantic Division's best and worst said Panthers coach Doug MacLean. "It was good to come back from two down, but we didn't have our legs and we didn't have any jump tonight."

Mike Hough had the other goal for the Panthers, who own the league's best record at 11-2-5. thought we battled back."

Capitals 3, Canadiens 1

Jim Carey made 30 saves and Kelly Miller's first goal of the season was the game-winner.

Peter Bondra and Sergei Gonchar also scored for the Caps (9-9), who have won three of their last four games to climb to the .500 mark for the first time this

Brian Savage had the lone goal for Montreal, which fell to 2-7-1

Defending hoops champs lose opener

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Harold Jamison scored eight points in overtime Friday night and No. 20 Clemson beat third-ranked Kentucky 79-71 in The Classic, making the Wildcats the third straight defending national champion to lose their opening game.

lamison, who finished with 20 points, gave Clemson the lead for good with a three-point play with 2:48 left that made it 70-67. His dunk came on a nice wraparound pass from Greg Buckner, who had taken a lob pass from Iker Iturbe.

The Wildcats, who won their sixth national title last April with a victory over Syracuse, were just 1-for-10 from the field in the overtime.

Bet. Jerusalem takes league lead

THE National League passed on to new leadership in the most convincing way last night when Betar Jerusalem beat former leaders Hapoel Petah Tikva and switched places with them at the top of the standings.

The match turned out to be the best of yesterday's eight National League matches and showed once and for all that Betar is the top contenders for the league title.

Defending champions Maccabi Tel Aviv and Maccabi Haifa failed to show their true potential in a disappointing clash at Ramat Gan, the match ending in a 1-1 draw and both sides remain on 15 points, eight behind Betar.

Hapoel Beersheba is clear in third spot on 18 points and looks to be running into some form after beating Hapoel Tel Aviv in the Negev last night. Maccabi Herzliya managed its first win of the season, but nevertheless is still in bottom spot. The team beat Hapoel Kfar Sava by a lone goal to register its first league victory for eight months. Betar Jerusalem 3

Hapoei Petah Tikva 0 A fine performance by Betar at Teddy Stadium against an equally good Hapoel Petah Tikva side nevertheless saw the home side walk away with a 3-0 win, all the points and a switch in positions at the top. Petah Tikva played a fast, open game, but was unable to pack any punch in the area, not iroubling İtzik Kornfein.

Betar, on the other hand, managed to convert its efforts into three very fine goals.

The first came from an excellent Itzik Zohar free kick in the sixth minute which curled round the wall from 18 meters out and left Shai Hess helpless as the ball made its way into the top righthand comer. The match continued to enthrall the 12,000 spectators, most of whom came to see Betar take over the league leadership and they were not disappointed. In the second half, Betar struck twice more through Eli Ohana, sending Petah Tikva to its first defeat of the season. The first of those came in the 59th minute when Ohana pounced on a ball which rebounded off the post after Yossi Abuksis's lob just missed, and he cooly tapped the ball home. The third, 11 minutes from time was a real beauty, as Ohana waltzed round two defenders and slotted the ball home gracefully as meters out.

match which in recent seasons would have drawn at least double, if not triple that number, and almost certainly would have been dubbed the "Match of the Season.'

This time round, neither club is presently in a position to claim it is worthy of playing in a match which merits that sort of status.

After ending a relatively uneventful first half goalless, Nir Klinger put the hosts in the lead with a goal in the 49th minute after Avi Nimni broke through the Haifa defense to set up an excellent chance for the Maccabi cap-

Some poor defending in the latter stages allowed Haifa to get back in the match and substitute Hezi Shirazi equalized in the 76th minute with almost his first touch of the game after pouncing on a ball which rebounded off the post. Hapoel Beersheba 1

Evergreen Nissim Cohen, at 43 was the hero of the day for Bnei Yehuda as the team capitalized on a very poor showing by Taiba.

A few unsavory pre-match inci-dents soon subsided when play got under way, but it was almost all one-way traffic at the Hatikva Quarter as Taiba failed to find any counter offensives to Bnei Yehuda's free-flowing game.

Taiba's resistance collapsed in the second half when first Avi Tikva and then Kobi Refuah struck fior the home side. In the 55th minute, Nissim

Cohen made an excellent pass to Tikva, who beat Mickey Dahan in the Taiba goal. Five minutes later, Cohen was again in the thick of the action when he set up Refuah who scored a blinder from 25

Tibor Salai could have given Beit She'an the three points it was looking for, but failed to convert a second-half penalty after Serjan Chulkovic was fouled in the area. The hosts continued to pile on the pressure during thekir half, but were unable to break through the Holon defenses.

Hapoel Haifa 2

Hapoel Jerusalem 0 The Haifaites gained a very important morale-boosting win over a poor Jerusalem side.

The visitors hardly threatened Haifa, which went ahead through Moshe Eisenberg in the 16th minute when he received a ball from captain Tal Banin, beat an offside trap and raced forward to hit the ball past Jerusalem 'keeper Jaroslaw Baku.

Eisenberg struck his second goal in the 65th minute with a shot from 12 meters after again receiving a ball from Banin, who had an excellent game.

Eisenberg had several more chances to score, but even the 2-0 scoreline was enough to bolster Haifa's sagging confidence in win in eight months yesterday in a scrappy game with Hapoel Kfar Sava which saw players from both sides sent off.

Maccabi Herzliya 1 Hapoel Kfar Sava 0 Herzliya gained its first league

Roman Filipchuk scored in the ninth minute after receiving a ball from Igor Shkvirin, as Herzliya took the lead in a league match for the first time this season.

Oren Hajaj got himself sent off after a blatant foul on Herzliya's Oleg Neduda in the 22nd minute as the home team played with more enthusiasm and commitment than has been seen from it this sea-

The balance of power was restored in the 73rd minute when Herzliya's Guy Gatt was sent off. Soon afterwards Filipchuk was substituted after failing repeatedly to increase Herzliya's and his own goal tally.

Herzliya had a few anxious moments towards the end as referee Danny Koren added five min-utes of injury time, but it held on for a crucial win, the first one this Maccabi Petah Tikva 3 Ironi Rishon 1

Hawks hold Heat to record-low 21 points in second half

ATLANTA (Reuter) - Tyrone Corbin scored 22 points and Eldridge Recasner made six free throws in the final minute as the Atlanta Hawks kept the Miami Heat to an NBA-record 21 points in the second half on the way to an 85-77 victory Friday. After the Heat were called for an illegal defense technical foul, Christian Laettner made the free throw, pulling the Hawks within 74-73 with 2:50 left in the fourth quarter. Corbin made a threepointer with 1:45 to go, putting the Hawks ahead for good, 76-74. It was Atlanta's first lead since the first quarter. "It was a great win for us," said Atlanta coach Lenny Wilkins. We had to be ready to play mentally and physically. I didn't want them to drop their heads at halftime, the big thing was we had to defend and we did that."

Michael Jordan scored 38 points and Scottie Pippen added 17 points and seven assists as host Chicago continued to dominate opponents.

Jordan, who always plays well in his home state, hit 15-of-25 of shots in just 29 minutes. He also keyed a second-quarter run before sitting out the entire fourth quarter. "I felt good tonight," Jordan said. "I came out aggressive and looked for my shot and it felt

The FTSE 100 index closed 32.1 points higher at 3.958.2. leaving it up 47.4 points on the week.

FRANKFURT - German shares

ended bourse trade on Friday at a record closing level, but even the prospect of the Deutsche Telekom flotation tomorrow was not quite enough to generate impetus needed to penetrate the magic 2.800 point level. The DAX-30 index ended at a record high of 2,795.80 up 18.79 points. This was a rise of 55.97 since last Friday. In postbourse trade the index stood at 2,800.60 up 16.21. PARIS - French shares hit a fresh closing high on Friday on the back of a continued Wall Street rally and underpinned by a home made run in financial shares. The blue-chip CAC-40 index closed up 22.15 points or one percent at 2,240.33 up 35.13 on the week. ZURICH - Swiss shares closed at a record high for the second day in active trade. Dealers said the firm dollar and short covering connected to the options and futures expiry on Soffex drove the market higher to a record close after an intra-day all-time high. The Broad SPI closed up 23.05 to new closing high at 2,486.68 a rise of 47.02 from a week ago.

TOKYO - Tokyo stocks closed lower on Friday, shedding gains posted early in the morning, brokers said. They said an unclear market direction, thin trade and position squaring ahead of the weekend weighed down the indices in the afternoon. The 225share Nikkei average fell 101.31 points, or 0.48 percent, to 20.929.73 down 271.31 on the

HONG KONG - Hong Kong stocks snapped a five-day winning streak on Friday to end the session sharply lower, as investors locked in profits following a week of record highs. The Hang Seng index closed 115.43 points lower at 12,889.37 a gain of 138.21 from a week ago.

SYDNEY - Australian shares set a new record close on Friday with the market inspired by the remarkable rise of the Dow Industrials, which closed on Thursday above the 6300 level for the first time. The All Ordinaries index finished 24.8 points up at 2,387.3 a rise of 25.2 since last week.

JOHANNESBURG - A late push by a strong industrial index ensured South African stocks finished in positive territory as a sag-ging gold index held back advances. Dealers say the market is seen as being oversold recently and stronger rand and Wall Street's bull run providing a shortterm boost to battered sentiment.

THE Haifa Youth Orchestra and the Haifa Symphony Youth Orchestra perform a special festive concert tonight (8:30) at the Haifa Auditorium. Under the baton of Eliezer Hahti the audience will be able to enjoy selections by Albinoni, Mozart, John Williams and Elgar as well as hasidic, blues and jazz music. The soloists are soprano ... Efrat Rotem and saxophone... wizard Peter Wertheim.

DANCE

MICHAEL AJZENSTADT

THERE are still two more opportunities to enjoy La La La Human Steps' newest creation 2, a work which combines dance and film in Edouard Lock's most personal and exhilarating style. Tomorrow and Tuesday at the Tel Aviv Performing Arts Center (8:30).

GUITAR FESTIVAL

HELEN KAYE

LOCAL guitarist Tali Roth and Greek colleague Dimitris Dimakopoulos present a program of Voutsinas, Giuliani, Rodrigo and others, tonight at Tzavta Tel Aviv at 7 p.m.

* LOOKING FOR RICHARD - AI Pacino's directing debut is an energetic and refreshingly honest documentary exploration of the sometimes-steep challenges that confront contemporary American audiences and actors when faced with a play by Shakespeare. Funny, unpretentious and didactic in the best sense of the word, the movie traces Pacino's journey into the heart of Richard III, one of the bard's earliest plays and also one of his knottiest. .

By unpacking the difficult-to-follow tragedy, scene by scene, character by character, the director/star hopes to make Shakespeare exciting, even for the young woman he chats with in an early scene, who says that Hamlet "sucks." While the results of his grapplings may not be especially profound or radical, there's something sweet and altogether admirable about Pacino's scruffy eagerness to spread the word from Stratford-upon-Avon. With performances by Alec Baldwin, Kevin Spacey and Winona Ryder and interviews with John Gielgud, Vanessa Redgrave, Derek Jacobi and others. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

 LONE STAR - A big, satisfying swirl of a movie, John Sayles's latest picture audaciously blends questions of personal and political history with an old-fashioned mystery story. Set in a Texas border town, the film opens with the discovery of a human skeleton and rusting police badge among the cacti on an abandoned riflerange. Mournful-eyed Sheriff Sam Deeds (Chris Cooper), son of the town's late, legendary lawman Buddy Deeds (played in flashbacks by Manhew McConaughey), decides to launch an investigation into what appears to be a 40-year-old murder involving his own father and another notorious and widely loathed sheriff (Kris Kristofferson). Sayles's greatest achievement here is the vital, Dickensian use he makes of his huge, racially varied cast. Until the very end, when he flags and spreads the resolution around in ways that strain credibility, he consistently turns sharp attention and sympathy to each character as a complex individual instead of as a token. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

Egypt to charge Azzam with espionage

Jerusalem Post Staff and news agencies

EGYPT will issue an official charge sheet next week against Azzam Azzam and an Egyptian citizen accused of spying, a public prosecution source said yesterday.

He said the prosecutor had questioned Azzam, an Israeli Arab from Galilee, and Egyptian national Emad Eddin Abdel Hamid and would issue the charge sheet detailing the accusation tomorrow or Tuesday.

Former 'Post' reporter Ze'ev Schul dies at 72

ZE'EV Schul, who worked as a reporter for The Jerusalem Post for 15 years - most of them as a military correspondent covering such stories as the Six Day War, the Yorn Kippur War and the withdrawal from Sinai - died at week's end. He was 72, Schul was born in Germany and came to Israel with his family, via England, in 1936.

He enlisted in the Hagana in 1937 and helped smuggle in much needed arms during the late 1930s. He later was trained in reconnaissance, eventually being placed in command of the reconnaissance unit in the Hagana Field Corps's Second Battalion in the Tel Aviv District During the War of Independence he was an instructor for an NCO's course.

He began his journalism career here with the Palestine Broadcasting Service, then worked for JNF, the Histadrut and ltim, among others, before joining the Post in 1959.

His overseas assignments included covering the conflicts in Cyprus, Nigeria, Iran and Ethiopia. Schul was the winner of several prizes, including the Shai Agnon Prize.
He is survived by his wife

Shulamit, three children and grandchildren.
